One of the most exciting aspects of the World Cup is the format of the tournament. The teams will compete in a round-robin format, where each team will play against every other team in the group stage. This ensures that every match is crucial and adds to the excitement and intensity of the tournament.

The top four teams from the group stage will then advance to the knockout stage, which includes the semi-finals and the final. The knockout matches are known for their nail-biting finishes and high-pressure situations, making them a treat for cricket fans.

As the host nation, India will have the advantage of playing in familiar conditions and in front of their passionate home crowd. The Indian team is known for its strong batting lineup and spin bowling prowess, which could prove to be a formidable combination on home soil.

However, they will face tough competition from other cricketing powerhouses like South Africa, Australia, England, and New Zealand, who have consistently performed well in recent ICC tournaments. These teams have a strong pool of talented players and will be determined to lift the World Cup trophy.
